While the country has witnessed many funerals of national prominence, I think it's fair to say that few have carried the kind of attention, emotion, and gravity as Charlie Kirk's memorial service Sunday. And for those with eyes to see and ears to hear, it revealed a striking contrast between humanity's two most influential faiths.

Where Erika extended mercy, Omar doubled down on contempt.

The juxtaposition could not be clearer.

Christianity, at its truest, runs against every human instinct. It announces a Savior who forgave His executioners and calls His people to do the same. Islam, as it was represented in this moment, responded not with forgiveness but with fury.

grave. Growing up hearing that, and then witnessing people celebrate life, speak of God's love, and remember someone through the impact he had on others; it felt so refreshing, so positive.

After watching Erika Kirk's words, Ebrahimi was dumbfounded, offering this reflection:

I cannot fathom the strength it takes to stand and deliver such a meaningful speech after losing the love of your life. But even more than that, the grace it takes to forgive the very person who destroyed your world. I cannot imagine myself ... inviting others to spread God's love in response because, as she said, 'we do not respond to hate with hate.' That is powerful beyond words.

If this is what Christianity truly embodies, then I am envious of those who get to experience that feeling.

Yes, Ms. Ebrahimi, that is what Christianity represents. That is the difference on display. Where one worldview produces anger, the other produces forgiveness. Where one instills fear, the other offers hope. Where one clings to grievance, the other testifies to grace.

The world may debate Charlie Kirk's politics or personality for years to come. But what no one can ignore is that his memorial service revealed something bigger than him. It put on full display the extraordinary difference between Christianity and Islam.

A difference measured not in arguments, but in love, joy, and forgiveness that the world cannot explain.

In the wake of losing her husband in the most brutal and public of ways, Erika Kirk stood before a grieving crowd and, as a Christian clinging to her faith, spoke words that sounded impossible:

On the cross, our Savior said: 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.' That man. That young man. I forgive him. I forgive him because it's what Christ did. And it's what Charlie would do.

Forgiveness, in the face of assassination? Grace, extended toward the very one who shattered her world? That's anything but natural. It was nothing less than the supernatural breaking through human frailty. And the impact didn't stop in that room; it was the manifestation of Christlike mercy rippling outward to millions of online viewers around the world.

No one articulated this contrast more powerfully than someone who has lived on both sides of it. Sana Ebrahimi, an ex-Muslim from Iran, affirmed the reality of Islam demonstrated in the bitterness of Representative Omar:

In Islam, even though we believe that good people go to heaven, the relationship with God is taught through fear. Funerals are overwhelmingly sad, often filled with warnings of the terrifying first night in the

My wife called on her way home, after a long day at work, and asked me to run her some hot water and not to forget the bubbles....

She's gonna be thrilled. Love that woman.
